

Account Security Policy

1. Purpose and Scope

This policy defines how account-level signals — such as account age, device history, and prior risk flags — factor into transaction risk decisions. It complements, but does not replace, the Transaction Risk Policy.

2. New Account Risk

Accounts younger than 7 days are considered New and contribute a minimum of 30 points to behavioral risk on every transaction, because new accounts are disproportionately associated with synthetic identity fraud and bust-out schemes.

Accounts between 7 and 30 days old are considered Recent and contribute a minimum of 10 points to behavioral risk. Accounts older than 30 days receive no automatic age-based risk penalty.

3. Prior Risk Flags

Each unresolved risk flag on a user's account (for example, a prior chargeback, a prior confirmed fraud report, or a prior manual review that resulted in a Block) contributes 15 additional points of behavioral risk per flag, up to a maximum of 60 points from this signal alone.

Risk flags are only removed after a documented investigation concludes the flag was a false positive, or after 180 days with no further incidents on the account, whichever comes first.

4. New Device Risk

A transaction from a device not previously associated with the account contributes a minimum of 20 points to device risk. If the new device is also paired with a new, never-before-seen shipping or billing location in the same transaction, the device risk contribution increases to a minimum of 35 points.

A transaction submitted with no device identifier at all (for example, a stripped or spoofed device fingerprint) is treated as the highest device risk tier and contributes a minimum of 40 points, because missing device telemetry is itself a strong fraud signal.

5. Account Recovery and Re-Verification

Any transaction occurring within 2 hours of a successful account password reset or account recovery flow must receive an additional 25 points of behavioral risk, reflecting the elevated risk window immediately following account takeover attempts.
